Governor's MONTHLY LETTER

CREATE LASTING IMPACT

A LASTING GIFT FOR THE FUTURE, WOVEN THROUGH ACTION AND COLLABORATION

Rotary International District 2750 2026-27 Governor Hidemasa Muto

A Lasting Gift for the Future, Connected Through The Rotary Foundation

On the Occasion of Rotary Foundation Month in November

Four months have now passed since the beginning of this Rotary Year. Through my Governor's Official Visits, I have had the opportunity to visit many clubs and experience firsthand the outstanding service activities they undertake, each reflecting its own history, culture, and local characteristics. These experiences have once again reminded me of the remarkable strength of Rotary.

I have often said that Rotary is so appealing precisely because every club has its own unique character. Each club identifies the challenges facing its community, thinks independently about how to address them, and takes action. The Rotary Foundation plays a vital role in supporting these diverse initiatives and helping them grow into an even greater force for good.

November is Rotary Foundation Month.

When people hear about The Rotary Foundation, many may immediately think of contributions and grant programs. However, I believe that the true value of The Rotary Foundation lies in transforming our desire, as Rotarians, to be of help to someone into tangible acts of service and carrying the results of those efforts forward into the future.

District Grants support service activities undertaken by individual clubs in response to the specific needs of their communities. Global Grants, on the other hand, provide a framework for addressing larger-scale challenges through international collaboration.

Activities that may be difficult for a single club to accomplish on its own become much more achievable through the support of The Rotary Foundation and collaboration among clubs and districts.

One concrete example of this approach this year is our ongoing effort to launch an international joint service project, in cooperation with a Rotary district in Korea, to improve the educational environment for children in Mongolia.

This initiative was first sparked by my interaction with Kim Jin-hwan, who was then the Governor-elect of Rotary International District 3650. When we met in Tokyo, he introduced the idea of supporting education in Mongolia and subsequently presented us with a concrete project proposal.

The project involves establishing an AI and IT Learning Center at a junior high school in Ulaanbaatar, the capital of Mongolia.

The plan is to expand classrooms and renovate existing facilities, install 50 AI-ready computers, provide educational materials, and offer training for local teachers. Through these initiatives, we aim to expand opportunities for children to learn about emerging technologies.

Led by local Rotary clubs in Mongolia, the project is planned as a collaborative effort involving Rotary Districts 3650 and 3640 in Korea, together with our own District 2750 in Japan, with the aim of securing support through a Global Grant.

I believe that this kind of collaboration, extending beyond district boundaries and even across national borders, demonstrates the tremendous power of The Rotary Foundation.

By bringing together the knowledge, experience, financial resources, and personal connections of each district, we can make projects possible that no single district could achieve on its own.

Above all, at the heart of this project is the development of people. Children who learn AI and IT in this new educational environment may one day realize their dreams and grow into individuals who contribute to the development of their communities. Expanding these possibilities is surely one of the most valuable gifts we can give to the next generation.

Another important role of The Rotary Foundation lies precisely in this commitment to developing future generations.

On a previous occasion, I attended the general meeting of the Rotary Foundation Alumni Association, where a panel discussion was held featuring alumni who had returned to Japan after studying abroad and scholarship recipients preparing to embark on their own international journeys.

I was deeply impressed by the way former scholars shared their experiences and encouraged young people who were about to take their first steps into the wider world.

Those who were once supported by Rotary now, in turn, support the next generation. I believe this enduring cycle of giving and receiving support is one of the most precious assets that The Rotary Foundation has nurtured over many years.

This year's District Theme is: "A Lasting Gift for the Future, Woven Through Action and Collaboration."

Making contributions is itself an act of service. Using those contributions to carry out meaningful service projects is another form of action. And when clubs work together, districts collaborate, and individuals connect with one another, these actions can lead to even greater and more lasting impact.

Contributing to The Rotary Foundation is not simply about providing financial resources. It is also about expanding the possibilities of someone we have not yet met and helping to support that person's future.

I believe that a district should not be an organization that imposes uniform guidance on all clubs. Rather, it should be an organization that respects the individuality of each club and supports the kind of service that reflects its own character and strengths.

To achieve this, I would like to see the various district committees work more closely together, sharing information about grant programs and the experiences gained through individual projects. By doing so, we hope to create an environment in which every club can make more active and effective use of The Rotary Foundation.

I encourage each club to take the opportunity presented by Rotary Foundation Month in November to learn more about the Foundation's activities and discuss the possibilities for service within your communities.

I also ask for your continued understanding and support of the Annual Fund, the Endowment Fund, and the PolioPlus Fund, which provide the essential resources to sustain and advance these activities.

Nurture people, connect people, expand the circle of service throughout the world.

Through each and every one of your actions and acts of collaboration, let us turn the promise of "A Lasting Gift for the Future" into reality through The Rotary Foundation.
